Familiar, Something I Use to Know

by Nightcrawler247

Summary

They survive falling off cliff and Hannibal sees this as a chance to finally have what he always wanted. Him and will together as murder husbands. He thinks he's finally managed to break and remodel Will into everything he every wants. The perfect friend, partner, and lover.

But he didn't realize he broken Will completely.

Or

After the cliff fall instead of becoming the murder happy, loving equal husband Hannibal's always wanted, Will falls into a catatonic state that does nothing except try to kill himself when given the chance.

Hannibal is devesated knowing he finally pushed Will too far.

Eventually Will finally manages to kill himself despite Hannibal’s efforts and Hannibal follows after him.

Only to wake years in the past, soon after he'd met the man. He has second chance and he doesn't intend to ruin this one.

Notes

tag ideas welcome

See the end of the work for more notes

Hannibal never considered the possibility of being wrong.

Like.... never. Not just with this but in his whole life. Sure, he'd changed his methods and hypothesis with the gather of further information but he never considered that being wrong just having better insight. He was certain he had all he needed to get exactly what he wanted from Will.

He just... he never considered he was wrong.
